

Abstract

When the calculation of derived data or the adjustment of derived data is executed in an analysis process, the derived data displaying system of the present invention enables the selection of new graphical elements for which it is wished to calculate derived data or adjust derived data. When calculations can be performed on the graphical elements selected during this time a derived data user interface is displayed. When calculation is not possible, a derived data adjustment user interface is displayed.

10005032-120401